The Stories of Great Fortunes in a great many instances find a considerable element of attraction in the fact that they grew from apparently insignificant things. Many successful businesses, if not large fortunes, have grown from Times-Dispatch Want Ads. Success is the trade mark of fortune. If your neighbors can grow healthy, strong businesses by advertising in Times-Dispatch Want Ads. you can. The cost is one cent a word, minimum charge ten cents, when paid in cash. Phone ads., one cent a word, minimum twenty-five cents.

Following each classification below is the announcement or a progressive reliable concern, which is prepared to offer special facilities to the "Mail Order Trade." Partigularly to farmers and those who reside some distance from the conveniences of the city stores. Owing to the extension of the rural free delivery revies throughout this section, it is no longer necessary to "come to town" to do your shopping—simply make your selection from the goods listed below or write for information, which will be glady mailed and then send your order by mail. The concerns listed on this page are selected as representative and may be classed as headquarters in their particular line. When writing for catalogues or information always mention The Times-Diepatch.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Having become a member of the firm of Peers & Owens Cq., I have found it neces-sary to resign my position as munager of the Boys' and Children's Department of O. H. Berry & Co., that I might give my entire attention to the business of this firm.

I wish to thank my kind friends and patrons for their liberal support and patronage in the field I am just leaving, and to solicit a continuance of the same in my new line of smart things for ladies'

Very respectfully, THOS. B. FLOYD.

SHE IS A FLAT FINDER.

And She is Kept Busy the Year Round—Many Women Clients.

One of the busiest women in the city to-day is a professional flat finder. While she is an all the year round flat hunter, just now her entire attention is devoted just now her entire attention is devoted to hunting up quarters for women living in the suburbs or even so far away as Chicago who want to enjoy the delights of winter in Washington.

"You know yourself," said the flat hunter in explaining the need for her existence, "how the glowing descriptions of agents often turn out.

"Bright, sunny rooms turn out to-be dark, gloomy cells, and stylish furniture a rickety mass that you wouldn't use in your kitchen. With my knowledge of localities and agents 1 am able to secure some charming quarters for comparatively, small communications."

How Finnegan Got His Whiskey

(A Sea Story of the Russiag-Japanese War.)

(By Morgan Robertson.)

(Author, or "Sinful Peck," "Spun-Yarn," "Down to the Sea," Etc.)

(Copyright, 1965, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

They were a seasoned lot, these officers and men of the Argyll. By right of might they proclaimed their mastery over all things on sea or land within range of their guns, and based their right of might upon faith in the infallibility of Finnegan. Old Man Finnegan had risen, by wittee of his peculiar power when drunk, to the position of silent oracle. He was supplied by the last captain's orders and in defiance of service regulations with a pint of good whiskey each day.

But the new captain, Rumson, smelled Finnegan's breath at the first inspection quarters.

"You have been drinking," spluttered the captain.

"Yes, sir," answered Finnegan, mild protest at the captain's manner showing on his kindly old face.

"Don't ever again let me hear of you drinking whiskey on board this ship."

In vain the officers, after quarters, tactfully explained the delicate situation, and related the many occasions on which Finnegan had saved the ship and all hands. Capt. Rumson, fresh from a home station, would brook no laxity of morals.

The news went around, and an uncasiness settled down on the whole ship's company; a full 39 per cent, of efficiency was subtracted from the craw as a whole. Finnegan, mild, law-abiding and intensely suggestible, became nervous, iraseible and reckless, as was to be expected from the sudden stoppage of stimulant, yet remained up to his general level of useful ness, what he lost in steadiness being made good by the recklessness. He was invaluable in a certain line of work—the investigation of floating mines adrift in the Yellow Sea, with a view to securing evidence for use in some late international court of inquiry.

Soon after a gale with a cross sea hove the big ship nearly on end, demolished the two main 13-inch turrets, and reduced the two main 13-inch turrets, and reduced the two main 13-inch turrets, and reduced the for parts of the Argyll to scrap-iron, without receiving a stratch or a dent. With all big guas out of commission, eight-inch ammunition nearly exhausted, the crew disheartened, and Finnegan sober, the Argyll was destined for the dock-yard, and to get there quickly she chose the 'rather dangerous passage through the Lao-Youngte Strait. The strait was a nesting-spot for Russian scont and oppedo craft, lightly armed and harmless, but quick to carry news and fine Argyll found three much heavier oraft in her path at daybreak on the morning after the passage through the strait, and toget house the irather of the first time in her career, turned all the first time in her career, turned and the firms, can be such a position that the

there was a slight bump felt by these in the forward end of the ship. Those in a advantageous position looked overboard. A round, rusty furtleback glistended and bobbed in the wash of the bow wave—a floating mine that had not exploded when struck. And they had hardly realized this, when the top of the mine lifted, a hairy flat followed and an angry voice called out: "Well, fwat the blazes are yetryin' to do now." "Finnegan, Finnegan," yelled those who had seep, and the magic name went through the ship. As the amazed Capt. Rumson reached the bridge amid his excited and half-dressed officers, the strident voice of Finnegan came faintly from astern. "Ye can shieer better hye can shoot, ye murderin' villains! Ye can rim me down, but ye couldn't hit the Rock ay Gibraitri." "What—what," stammered the captain. "How did he get there? Wasn't he blown up?". "The Lord only knows, captain," said.
